GO Fellows Get Going

GO Fellows serving others around the world

Savanah Low '16 of Austin, Texas, is one of 15 Austin College students heading for the Caribbean, South America, Asia, Africa or Europe this summer. But there's no vacation time involved. As 2015 Global Outreach (GO) Fellows, these students are mindful of one thing: serving others.

Savannah's fellowship is taking her to Africa for work with an AIDS/HIV organization in Uganda. The experience she hopes will inform her better, particularly when she enters graduate school to study public health.

As for Parsa Azam '17 of Plano, public health issues interest her as well. Since high school, she has pursued medical courses and hands-on experiences in hospital settings. Now Parsa, who was born in Bangladesh, will join a medical relief organization serving children in India for a month. "I'm from a third world country," she says, regarding her volunteer interest. "I've seen poverty firsthand."

Bryan Carter '17 of Fort Worth will be teaching. He's packing his bags for Argentina, traveling abroad for the first time. English, math and science will be the subjects taught during his six-week commitment. Bryan, who is minoring in Spanish, looks forward to immersing himself in the country's rich Spanish culture.

The Global Outreach Fellowship program, created in 2007, promotes servant leadership around the world--through innovative experiential opportunities. GO Fellowships are underwritten through a grant from the Todd and Abby Williams Family Foundation of Dallas.
